Health Nugget

In the Da Quing Study, 25,577 individuals with impaired glucose tolerance were randomized to a control group, a diet group, an exercise group, or a group combining both. When evaluating this intervention over a 20 year period, the authors combined all participants receiving one or the other treatments in the initial study and compared them with the control group. The results showed a 43% lower incidence of Type 2 Diabetes, and participants in the lifestyle group spent 3.6 fewer years with diabetes compared with participants in the control group.
