Data from the International Childhood Cardiovascular Cohort Consortium involving 42,000 children and seven prospective child cohort studies beginning back in the 1970's preliminary results include the following: "...Each 10% increase above average in serum cholesterol in childhood as associated with a 16% increased risk of hospitalization for a cardiovascular event at a mean age of 49 years. A 2-point rise in BMI was associated with a 20% higher risk... And smoking in childhood or adolescence was associated with a 77% higher risk of a cardiovascular event." *Ref. Bruce Jancin.
